A taste of France

If you've ever struggled to read a French menu and order with confidence then help is at hand right here on the Coast as Debbie Southern reports.

If you've ever been to a French restaurant and felt a little lost when faced with a menu full of dishes like côte de boeuf, pommes frites and poisson du jour, then Stephanie Posterino is ready to put the right words in your mouth.

With a masters in applied languages and three languages under her belt (French, English and Spanish), Stephanie is well equipped to unravel the mysteries surrounding the unique pronunciations and endless verb-conjugations of one of the world's most widely spoken languages.

Stephanie is headed for Mooloolaba's 4th Floor this month to conduct the second of her Eat Speak Drink French conversation classes. The classes cover everything from how to book a table and order from the menu, to fine dining etiquette and travel tips.

And to really get the taste for all things French, the lessons will be held in the 4th Floor's private dining cellar (numbers permitting), and each week classes will be followed by a two-course dinner and glass of French wine giving participants the chance to try out their newly learned vocabulary skills.

Stephanie, who works full-time as a language tutor, has been in Australia for five years. She grew up in the famed Bordeaux region and from the young age of eight wanted to be fluent in English. She later travelled, spent two years in the United Kingdom, and married an Australian food technologist.

Stephanie started offering her six-week French conversation courses at a Scarborough cafe/wine bar a year ago, and the response was fantastic. Participants ranged in age from mid 20s up to their mid 70s, and often returned to relay their success stories of speaking French.

"We have all sorts of people come along from really different backgrounds. We get to meet a lot of really interesting people," Stephanie said.

"In general, students might want to travel or they just want to learn French for fun. There's a lot of beginners.

"French is not very easy - there's so many different sounds.
